Along with the opening of school and a return to routine for many families comes "September - Better Breakfast Month". Designed to encourage better breakfasts for students, it's a good time for everyone to evaluate their early morning routine...and remember it's never too late to change.

Unending are the reasons and excuses we all give ourselves for not eating anything or grabbing a doughnut and coffee. They range from "I'm never hungry" to "I'd rather sleep" to "I never seem to have time" to "I don't like to eat in the morning"— the list goes on and on. But the facts are that a nutritious breakfast does effect physical and mental efficiency.

Don't restrict yourself when planning breakfast - typical breakfast foods are fine, but they're not all you can have for breakfast.

If time's a problem, make ahead an egg salad sandwich and eat it on the way to work or school. Keep a few hard cooked eggs on the refrigerator shelf (they keep up to 6 weeks in the shell). Warm sausage or ham biscuits in the oven while you get dressed; how about a hamburger? The list of better breakfast ideas is as unending as excuses for not eating breakfast — so there's no excuse for skipping breakfast, just remember to make yours nutritious.
